Unwinding Complexities of doing business

Because litigation is often not the right solution

Alternate Dispute Resolution, namely, Arbitration and Conciliation, is an internationally recognised and accepted process of resolving disputes or differences arising out of contractual obligations between parties – both commercial and employment contracts. In respect of commercial contracts, this is a much favoured mode of efficient, speedy and cheaper mechanism of dispute resolution as it achieves the desired result without unnecessary and interminable litigation. The emphasis is on ensuring that the contracts entered into are adhered to in letter and in spirit to the mutual satisfaction of all parties.
