With the coronavirus pandemic, there are many start-ups that will have to change their course of work. A survey by Indeed says that 64% of Indian businesses are pivoting in response to pandemic. Health-tech, artificial intelligence, E-commerce grocery platforms and habit-forming sectors related to working out, cooking, listening to podcasts and many others are the new emerging sectors. While some start-ups may face adverse challenges in the current scenario, a plethora of players in the start-up ecosystem are blooming. Some are even proactively adapting their business models to make themselves sustainable and continue to provide their services to their target audience.
